Lewis County businesses participated in the first program of its kind in the state Monday.

They all got together at Stonewall Resort for a local business community ambassador training.

Organizers said they want the county to be ready for the upcoming tourism season.

The free training also included networking opportunities.

"It's something new," said Francis Cogar of Weston Economic Development Authority. "It's very progressive we think for our community. We hope others maybe follow us. And we want to do more things to involve the community."

The event was sponsored by the Lewis County Chamber of Commerce, the Mountain Lakes and Lewis County Chambers of Commerce and the Weston and Lewis County Economic Development Authorities.
